Applying to health professions school is a competitive process, so it's important to begin planning early.

Get started your first year:

Find your major

You can choose any major and complete the necessary prerequisite courses to be competitive for admission.

Explore the different health professions

Medical school isn't the only route to make a difference in a patient's life.

Begin your prerequisite coursework

These courses are the framework that predict your readiness for a graduate program.

Get to know your professors

They are key to your academic success and you'll eventually ask them for letters of recommendation.

Gain extracurricular, healthcare, and volunteer experiences

Join a student organization, shadow a healthcare provider, and make an impact in the local community.
